FINDING THE BEST PRICES This comprehensive history of literature for stringed keyboard instruments covers mainstream works in current concert repertoire for pianists. The book provides an accessible overview of the literature, detailing key features of each major composition and discussing important schools of composition, trends, and influences. It delves into the piano repertoire of late 18th-century composers, offering commentary on every major composer with a focus on published sources. The book begins by tracing the development of keyboard instruments, followed by surveys of European and English keyboard music up to the Renaissance. Individual chapters explore Baroque music, Handel, Bach, galant style, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert, Mendelssohn, Schumann, Chopin, Liszt, Brahms, Debussy, French composers, nationalistic schools of Europe and North America, and concludes with a survey of 20th-century keyboard literature in Europe and North America. This book gives a broad and easy-to-understand history of music for all stringed keyboard instruments, focusing on popular works that pianists play today. It explains and lists out the different types of literature, looking at what makes each major piece special, and talks about important schools of composition, trends in keyboard music history, and how composers were influenced by others and their own work. The book also has comments about every major composer, with a special focus on the piano repertoire from the late 1700s. It starts with an overview of how keyboard instruments developed, then moves on to a survey of European and English keyboard music up until the end of the Renaissance. Separate chapters discuss the Baroque period in general, and specific works by Handel and J.S. Bach are highlighted. A chapter is dedicated to the galant style, followed by discussions about Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, and Schubert's piano sonatas, each one looking at all the pieces written by these composers. Later chapters focus on Mendelssohn, Schumann, Chopin, Liszt, and Brahms from the 19th century, while early 20th-century chapters explore Debussy and other French composers, as well as nationalistic schools in Spain, Russia, and other European countries. Finally, two last chapters examine the keyboard literature of Europe and North America in the later 20th century, with a comprehensive bibliography included. The publication covers key works from schools within Spain, Russia, and other major European nations. A thorough examination of modern European and North American literature from the late twentieth century is also presented through two concluding chapters. In addition to this comprehensive overview, a substantial listing of references is included.
